FIVE YEARS LATER, SUN MEDIA'S QUESTIONS TO NATIONAL DEFENCE (DND) ABOUT SOLDIER'S INVOLVEMENT IN HIGH RIVER FIREARMS SEIZURES REMAIN UNANSWERED

BACKGROUND INFORMATION: On June 21, 2013, the Minister of National Defence and the Chief of Defence Staff gave direct orders to the Canadian Armed Forces personnel deployed in Alberta for flood assistance “NOT TO ENGAGE IN LAW ENFORCEMENT ACTIVITIES.” The soldiers deployed in High River disobeyed these direct orders and helped the RCMP to kick in doors, search homes and seize firearms. The Department of National Defence denied this at the time, failed to answer the questions asked by Sun Media, failed to provide the full story to Parliament in response to written questions by MP John Barlow and only after years of filing Access to Information Act requests have they admitted the truth. Unfortunately, no commanders have been held accountable for the soldier's actions and no disciplinary action has been disclosed to date. The soldiers' aiding and abetting of the RCMP was never mentioned in the investigative report of the High River Gun Grab completed by the Civilian Review and Complaints Commission for the RCMP. The most recent information disclosed by the Department of National Defence is provided below. By Dennis R. CBC SASK - PROVINCE-WIDE GUN AMNESTY NETS HUNDREDS OF FIREARMS

This program, dubbed #GunAmnestySK, was inspired by the success of the Regina Police Service's two-week firearm amnesty in 2017. The Saskatchewan Association of Chief of Police launched the province-wide initiative in an effort to lower firearm-related offences. From 2012 to 2016 there have been thousands of crimes involving illegal firearms in the province, according to a news release. Prince Albert police previously said they didn't expect criminals to turn over their guns, but that such initiatives prevent other crooks from getting guns through other means.

PETITION AGAINST LONG GUN REGISTRY CROSSES 70,000 SIGNATURES

A petition sponsored by Rachael Harder which opposes the Liberal governments new Firearms bill has reached over 70,000 signatures. Many groups have argued that the bill largely regulates law-abiding citizens without providing any real mechanisms to reduce gun violence or negative externalities as a result of gun ownership. This is a serious problem as the bill has been pushed by the media and the Liberal party as a way to regulate gun violence. Its potential lack of real impact on dangerous activity while pretending to do more creates a scenario in which harmless law-abiding citizens are losing some freedoms, while rule breakers receive no new restrictions. by Ali Taghva - May 1, 2018

CBC - OPINION: CANADA'S GOVERNMENT IS CLEARLY UNINTERESTED IN FINDING INNOVATIVE SOLUTIONS TO GUN VIOLENCE

- What's more, it's unlikely that any of the information "shared" at last month's summit went into Bill C-71, given the bill was introduced two weeks later. When it comes to tackling gun violence, the government is clearly uninterested in finding bold and innovative solutions. As long as we continue to view gun ownership as a suspicious and criminal act, an approach that centres on law enforcement will always seem the most responsible. Governments should instead rely on other people in communities — doctors, social workers, educators and ex-offenders — who are closer to and may have greater trust from potential victims. Canada doesn't need a guns-first approach. Canada needs a victims-first approach. By Angela Wright · for CBC News · Posted: May 01, 2018 Angela Wright is a writer and public affairs professional. SOUTH AFRICA - COPS DESTROYED DOCUMENTS IN GUNS-TO-GANGS CASE - MORE ALLEGATIONS

Three former police officers, who were based at the Central Firearm Registry in Pretoria, are suspected of destroying documents relating to firearms and focusing on alleged 28s gang boss Ralph Stanfield, his wife and 18 associates, in a case which forms part of a national guns-to-gangs investigation. The charge sheet exposes serious allegations of criminality within the police and details acts which stretched from Gauteng to the Western Cape, including how officers allegedly worked with a group of suspects involved in the 28s gang, which is known for carrying out murders, assaults and intimidating witnesses in court cases. Some of the allegations include that details, which indicate that some of the accused had gone for firearm competency training, were entered into documents when they had actually never been for training.
